What Are Hallucinogens?

One of the most commonly abused kinds of drugs out there, hallucinogens cover a wide variety of drugs, and they are not necessarily all the ones that you might be thinking of. This term includes ayahuasca, DMT, DMX, ketamine, LSD and PCP – but also some of the lesser-known items such as peyote and salvia, and even those which some people erroneously think are harmless, such as psilocybin.

Any of these substances can be abused if you are not careful. If you think you might have a problem with any of these, or any other kind of hallucinogen, it's best to get in touch with us as soon as possible and get the help you need.

Abuse Versus Addiction

It's important to bear in mind that, although not all hallucinogens are considered addictive, it is nonetheless always possible to abuse these substances if you are not careful. Understanding the difference between abuse and addiction is really important, because it helps you to remain clear on what the problem is and what you might be able to do about it.

While addiction refers to being chemically dependent upon a substance, abuse is a broader term relating to the relationship you have with a drug. In short, if the drug is taking over your life in any way, or you feel as though you are giving too much of yourself to it and this is leading to problems in your life, then that is what we mean by abuse.

The good news is this: if you are in a situation of hallucinogen abuse, there is always help to be found – which is what Grand Falls Addiction Treatment Center is all about.

Signs Of Hallucinogen Abuse

It can be tricky to know whether you are abusing hallucinogens or not, so it's a good idea to be aware of some of the signs and symptoms of hallucinogen abuse in the first place. You might, for instance, notice that you are becoming more secretive around your drug use, perhaps stealing yourself away to take the drug or otherwise compartmentalizing it. Or you might even experience withdrawal when you are not on the drug – a sure sign that you are growing dependent on it.

Beyond that, other signs include having a lot of mood swings or feeling irritable – especially if this appears to 'improve' when you are on the hallucinogen of choice. You might experience intense psychosis or paranoia, or even lots of euphoria – this might sound good, but in fact it can get in the way of a life well lived. Finally, you might experience trouble getting or staying asleep.

If you notice any of these signs and symptoms, don't delay – get in touch with Grand Falls Addiction Treatment Center today.
