GET STARTED NOW

Inpatient alcohol and drug rehab refer to residential treatment, where patients live at the facility for the duration of their treatment. This type of care is generally considered the most effective, as it allows patients to focus solely on their recovery without outside distractions or triggers.

Unfortunately, inpatient alcohol and drug rehab can be very expensive, and many insurance plans do not cover the cost of treatment. This can leave people wondering if they can get into an inpatient alcohol and drug rehab without insurance.

The good news is that there are a number of options available for those who need help paying for inpatient alcohol and drug rehab. Here are a few things to consider if you, or a loved one, are looking for financial assistance with inpatient alcohol and drug rehab.

Government-Funded Rehab

One option for those who need help paying for inpatient alcohol and drug rehab is government-funded treatment. There are a number of government programs that provide funding for addiction treatment, including the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) and the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA).

To be eligible for government-funded rehab, you will typically need to meet certain income requirements. For example, SAMHSA's grant programs are only available to those who earn below 400% of the federal poverty level.

Sliding Scale Fee Structure

Another option for those who need financial assistance with inpatient alcohol and drug rehab is a sliding scale fee structure. With this type of pricing, the cost of treatment is based on your ability to pay.

This means that if you have a lower income, you will pay less for treatment than someone who has a higher income. This can make inpatient alcohol and drug rehab more affordable for those who may not be able to afford traditional treatment options.

Payment Plans

Another option for those who need financial assistance with inpatient alcohol and drug rehab is a payment plan. Many treatment centers offer payment plans or financing options to help make treatment more affordable.

This can be a good option if you do not have insurance or if your insurance does not cover the full cost of treatment. It is important to note that you will typically need to make a down payment when you enroll in a payment plan.

Crowdfunding

Crowdfunding is another option to consider if you need help paying for inpatient alcohol and drug rehab. With crowdfunding, friends, family, and strangers can donate money to help you pay for treatment.

There are a number of websites that allow you to set up a crowdfunding campaign, such as GoFundMe and Indiegogo. Be sure to set up your campaign in a way that clearly explains how the money will be used and why you are raising funds.

Scholarships

Many treatment centers offer scholarships to help patients pay for inpatient alcohol and drug rehab. Scholarships are typically based on financial need or other factors, such as being in recovery from a certain type of addiction.

To find out if a treatment center offers scholarships, contact the admissions department and ask about any financial assistance programs that may be available.
